

We Work in Madagascar

HoverAid works with remote communities along two major river systems in the west of Madagascar -

the Manambolo
and Mangoky.

Over 40,000 people live along the Manambolo river, in an extremely isolated part of the country, where the few roads that do exist become impassable in the wet season. HoverAid has a forward base in Ankavandra, the main town in the region.

Further south HoverAid is based in Beroroha on the Mangoky river, where over 130,000 people live along the Mian river and the many tributaries, with practically no access to health care.

HoverAid regularly takes teams of doctors to villages along the rivers as part of the Mad Medical Safari programme. Working in conjunction with Mission Aviation Fellowship (MAF) we also take doctors to Anjabetrongo in the South West, and Ampasinambo in the East.

Getting around Madagascar can rightly be called a challenge. Madagascar is as big as England and Germany combined and has only 6480 km of paved road. That is about 1.9% of what we have in the west in a similar area.
